As the lead business development representative for defense programs at World Wide Technology, Bandler is responsible for strategic planning, teaming and capture management. This includes working with internal and external teams to develop solutions that meet the needs of Defense Department customers. He is helping to transform World Wide from a traditional value-added reseller into a systems integrator.

Bandler also is active with several associations that support the federal information technology industry, including the American Small Business Coalition, the Washington Breakfast Club and the Young AFCEANs. For the coalition, he organized small-business industry days with the State Department and the National Security Agency.
